“Online community service and virtual volunteering provide practical pathways for more people to contribute consistently while building skills and maintaining accountability,” the Spokesperson added.

Volunteering should not be limited by transportation, location, or rigid schedules.”

Many communities depend on nonprofit organizations and local agencies to meet essential needs, yet potential volunteers are often limited by work obligations, school commitments, care-giving responsibilities, or lack of access to nearby service locations. Virtual volunteering helps address these challenges by enabling individuals to participate remotely.

Online service opportunities may include educational support, resource organization, digital content development, outreach assistance, and other mission-support activities. By expanding access to service options, The People Foundation aims to support community stability while offering volunteers meaningful opportunities for engagement and personal development.
