Under the agreement, Arbisoft will contribute its global education engineering expertise and its open-source learning platform, Edly, enabling institutions to build flexible, future-ready digital learning ecosystems. Thakaat will provide local strategic insight, ecosystem partnerships, and implementation leadership to ensure alignment with national priorities and measurable impact within the Saudi education landscape.

“This partnership reflects our shared commitment to supporting the Kingdom’s transformation journey,” said

Yasser Bashir, CEO of Arbisoft. “By combining global engineering excellence with deep local expertise, we aim to help build resilient digital learning infrastructures that empower educators, nurture gifted learners, and strengthen the Kingdom's future workforce."

"Our partnership with Arbisoft marks a strategic step driven by a shared belief in the rapid transformation taking place in the digital education sector worldwide, and in the importance of preparing for this shift through advanced technological infrastructure and innovative solutions. This partnership stems from strong confidence in Arbisoft's capabilities and its deep expertise in developing large-scale educational platforms. Beyond technical development, it aims to support national transformation in the education sector, foster innovation, and enhance the quality of educational outcomes, in alignment with the goals of the Human Capability Development Program and Saudi Vision 2030," said Sami Omar Al Hussayen, CEO of Thakaat.
