CMS finalized a 2026 Medicare conversion factor increase. However, dermatology practices may still experience reimbursement pressure due to RVU redistribution and practice expense adjustments within the Physician Fee Schedule. CMS also finalized a 2.5% efficiency adjustment applied to work RVUs across thousands of non-time-based services, along with reductions to certain facility practice expense RVUs. Because dermatology is a procedure-driven specialty, the net impact of these combined changes will vary significantly depending on a practice's CPT code mix and site of service.

“

The 2026 Medicare update is a good reminder that reimbursement changes are rarely defined by a single number.”

Inga Ellzey

"The 2026 Medicare update is a good reminder that reimbursement changes are rarely defined by a single number," said Inga Ellzey. "While the increase to the conversion factor offers some stability, dermatology practices still need to pay close attention to shifts in RVUs, practice expense inputs, and site-of-service economics. Practices that understand their top codes, monitor early reimbursement patterns, and stay focused on documentation accuracy will be in the best position to adapt."

Inga Ellzey Billing Companies works with dermatology practices nationwide to interpret what these updates mean at the code level and helping providers make informed operational decisions before revenue is impacted.
