Myrna Srouji has devoted more than 20 years to advancing veterinary medicine, establishing herself as a trusted leader in clinical practice, education, and veterinary technology. She is recognized for fostering collaborative environments where veterinary teams can thrive and pets and their families receive compassionate, high-quality care. Her career spans leadership roles in veterinary academics and hands-on work as a Registered Veterinary Technician, reflecting a rare combination of clinical skill and strategic oversight.

From an early age, Myrna's love for animals shaped her career path. Myrna believes that supporting families while delivering expert veterinary care is the cornerstone of meaningful impact in the profession.

In addition to her clinical and management accomplishments, Myrna is deeply committed to mentorship and education. She designed and implemented a structured internship program from the ground up, establishing clear workflows, training materials, and performance benchmarks.
