The school will offer a practical, accelerated 12-week dental assistant program designed to help students move quickly into the workforce while gaining meaningful clinical experience. The curriculum combines flexible online coursework with in-person instruction delivered inside a functioning dental office.

“Students learn best when education happens in real clinical settings,” said Chris Lofton, CEO of Zollege. “By partnering with established dental practices, we’re helping students gain practical skills that translate directly into career readiness.”

Students will complete their hands-on training through a partnership with Midtown Richmond Dentistry, a modern dental practice serving the Richmond community. Training within a live practice environment allows students to build experience in chairside assisting, infection control procedures, dental imaging support, patient communication, and daily office workflow.

The Richmond campus is designed to serve students across the metro area who are seeking an affordable alternative to traditional education models and a clear path into a stable, growing field.

Enrollment for the spring session is now open. Apply here.
