“We have always believed performance parts should prove themselves where it counts,” said Chris Sneed, founder of SneedSpeed. “Racing exposes weak parts, weak systems, and weak thinking very quickly. That is why this program matters. Chris Capaldi competing with a SneedSpeed-powered car continues SneedSpeed's use of racing as a real-world proving ground for durability, performance, and application-specific engineering.”

SneedSpeed develops performance powertrain systems engineered around durability, fit, and real-world performance.

Capaldi's participation in the 2026 SCCA season is expected to provide on-track visibility for the SneedSpeed brand while reinforcing the connection between engineering, durability, and performance in a competitive setting.

"I'm excited to represent SneedSpeed this season in SCCA competition," said Chris Capaldi. "There is a major difference between parts that simply fill space in the aftermarket and parts that are built to perform when the car is actually being pushed. We are out there to compete, represent the brand the right way, and show what a serious powertrain package can do."

SneedSpeed plans to share race updates, milestones, and behind-the-scenes coverage related to the program throughout the 2026 season.
