Since December 2025, Arts Garage's Senior Series has delivered meaningful arts programming to older adults and memory care communities. Teaching artists Micah Stinson and Karen King have provided a combined 31 hours of service, reaching 510 participants through interactive classes that foster creativity, connection, and cognitive engagement.

Of those participants, 367 were seniors, while 143 individuals were living with Alzheimer's, dementia, or partial memory loss, underscoring Arts Garage's commitment to accessible arts experiences that support wellness and quality of life for aging populations and their caregivers.

In parallel, the organization's Artists-in-Residence (AiR) Series has reached 472 participants to date, all of whom attended through free access. The program has engaged a broad network of community partners, including Pompey Park Seniors Club, Boynton Beach Seniors Club, the Spady Cultural Heritage Museum, more than 20 nonprofit organizations, and Arts Garage volunteers, extending its reach across diverse audiences.

“These programs reflect the core of our mission, ensuring the arts are accessible, inclusive and impactful across our community,” said Marjorie Waldo, President and CEO of Arts Garage. “From seniors and memory care participants to nonprofit partners and local residents, we are proud to create meaningful opportunities for connection through the arts.”

That impact extends to younger audiences through the Kimmel Family Series, which has reached 1,674 students across four schools — Plumosa School of the Arts, Village Academy, Spady Elementary, and

Daughter of Zion — through interactive productions like Journey to Oz, introducing students to live theatre through immersive, participatory experiences. Supported by the Virginia and Harvey Kimmel Family Foundation in partnership with the Community Foundation for Palm Beach and Martin Counties, the program removes financial barriers while creating early, meaningful exposure to the performing arts.
