

Young Nigerians Are Not Rejecting Farming. They're Rejecting Invisibility.

Farms.ng launches to help Nigerian farmers get seen, build trusted farming records, and access better opportunities.

LEKKI, LAGOS, NIGERIA, April 1, 2026 /EINPresswire.com/ -- For years, the story has been that young Nigerians are no longer interested in agriculture. Farms.ng believes that story misses the real problem.

Young people are not rejecting farming. They are rejecting a sector that still makes too many real farmers hard to see, hard to verify, and hard to take seriously.

Too many farmers still face the same barriers:

- limited visibility and digital presence
- weak trust signals for buyers, partners, and future financiers
- fragmented knowledge sharing and too much dependence on middlemen

Farms.ng is launching as a response to that visibility problem.

The platform helps farmers create free profiles, show what they grow, build visible farming records over time, and improve their chances of being discovered and trusted. Instead of treating farmers like anonymous supply, Farms.ng is designed to help make their work legible, credible, and easier to support.

"Farms.ng exists to make real farmers visible," said Uzoma O., Founder and CEO of Farms.ng. "When farmers can be seen, they can be trusted, and that is the foundation of a stronger, more modern agricultural economy."

Farms.ng also includes a technology layer called Zaam, which uses aggregated farm activity data to surface patterns, highlight risks, and support better decisions over time. In simple terms, it helps farmers and future partners better understand real activity on the ground and reduce uncertainty.

The platform is built around a simple idea: when farmers can be seen, their work can be understood. When their work can be understood, trust becomes easier to build. And when trust grows, opportunity becomes easier to access.

Through Farms.ng, farmers can:

- create a free farm profile
- show what they grow
- build a visible record of farming activity
- learn from real outcomes so they do not repeat costly mistakes
- strengthen their readiness for future technical support, partnerships, and financing opportunities as those systems develop

Farmers can also join the Farms.ng WhatsApp community:

The company says its long-term vision is to help create the conditions that make agriculture look more modern, more credible, and more rewarding to the next generation.

Every visible farm makes agriculture easier to believe in again.

Farmers and supporters can learn more at Farms.ng or join the WhatsApp community.
