The Quantum Kid explores quantum computing, AI, and cutting-edge science through curiosity-driven conversations between a child and leading experts - making complex STEM topics simple, engaging, and accessible for kids and families.

The channel launched in June 2025 and now has 113,000 subscribers. The channel has captured the attention of the science and technology community, resulting in multiple mentions in articles from the likes of New Scientist.

"Kids are naturally curious about how the world works. Kai asks questions in a way only a kid can – without overthinking it and without the worry of having to look smart and knowledgeable. We want to show that science, even as complex as quantum, is exciting and for everyone," said Katia Moskvitch.

The Quantum Kid has featured a range of high-profile guests, including the likes of Dr Steven Chu, Nobel Laureate in Physics and former U.S. Secretary of Energy, and Professor Peter Shor, inventor of Shor's algorithm, the discovery that sparked the modern era of quantum computing. With a growing global audience, the show aims to inspire the next generation to engage with the technologies shaping the future.

Voting closes soon, and every vote contributes to determining the People's Voice winner.
