Our three-times-a-year South Street Record Riot is one of our favorite events of the year. Philly is such a great music town, and South Street pulses with vinyl fun all day.”

The vinyl digging action is intense at the South Street Record Riot.

This year's event is held in coordination with South Street Springfest, a multi-block street fair taking place the same day. Springfest will feature a wide array of vendors, food offerings, and entertainment, creating a vibrant, festival-like atmosphere up and down South Street.

The Record Riot runs from 10 AM to 5 PM, with free admission for all attendees. Guests can enjoy great music playing throughout the day, fun giveaways, and additional shopping as local South Street businesses join in by selling their goods outdoors.

“Our three-times-a-year South Street Record Riot is one of our favorite events of the year,” says

Record Riot organizer Stephen Gritzan. "Philly is such a great music town and South Street pulses with vinyl fun all day. Plus we are holding the event in tandem with Springfest, so there's something for everyone."

The South Street Record Riot will return later in the year in front of Repo Records on Saturday, August 1st and Sunday, October 24th, giving collectors multiple opportunities to dig through crates in one of the city's most iconic neighborhoods.
