Cleaning Edge has invested millions in CESgo, a new platform delivering real time cleaning visibility, accountability and operational control across Australia.

We are not just cleaning buildings. We are creating operational transparency and real time visibility. CESgo gives businesses clarity, control and confidence through data driven cleaning operations.”

Clayburn Figredo

invested millions of dollars into the development and rollout of its proprietary desktop platform, CESgo, in what industry leaders are describing as a major shift in how businesses manage cleaning, hygiene and operational accountability.

The investment signals a new era for commercial cleaning across childcare centres, schools, aged care, offices, transport hubs, retail environments and industrial sites, where services are no longer invisible but fully measurable and transparent.

Founder Clayburn Figredo said the company is redefining what modern cleaning looks like in Australia.

“We are not just cleaning buildings. We are creating operational transparency and real-time visibility,” Figredo said.

“CESgo is the result of a multi-million-dollar investment into technology that gives businesses clarity, control and confidence.”

A new standard in operational visibility

The desktop-based CESgo platform captures every aspect of cleaning operations in real time, allowing businesses to see exactly what is happening across their sites.

Cleaning Edge staff log in and out digitally, with attendance and hours automatically verified.

Every task is outlined through structured workflows and photographic evidence of completed work is uploaded directly into the system.

Clients can view services undertaken, the timing, the staff involved and the results delivered, removing the uncertainty that has traditionally surrounded outsourced cleaning.

“For decades, cleaning has been a blind spot for many organisations,” Figredo said.

“Now businesses can see the work, the results and the value in real time.”

Clayburn Figredo, Founder and Managing Director of Cleaning Edge Solutions, stands in front of the group's brand wall, including the Figredo Charity Foundation.

From invisible service to measurable performance

The platform transforms cleaning from a reactive, checklist-based activity into a performance-driven function.

Images, reports and digital sign-offs provide a clear record of hygiene outcomes. Site requirements and task schedules are embedded into the system, ensuring consistency across locations and shifts.

“This is accountability elevated,” Figredo said.

“Every hour is captured, every job is documented and every outcome can be verified.”

The result is stronger oversight, improved service quality and better operational control.

Centralised communication and faster problem resolution

CESgo also functions as a communication hub between businesses, site managers and Cleaning Edge teams.

Clients can log requests, raise concerns and track progress in near real time. Issues are assigned, monitored and resolved within the platform, creating a clear record of action and accountability.

“Communication is one of the biggest challenges in outsourced services,” Figredo said.

“Our technology creates a single source of truth, ensuring nothing is missed and every request is followed through.”

Reducing risk and supporting governance

With increased scrutiny around hygiene, infection control and workplace standards, organisations are under pressure to demonstrate operational oversight.

Figredo said traditional paper-based reporting and fragmented communication systems are no longer fit for purpose.

“Boards, executives and regulators want data, not assumptions,” he said.

“CESgo provides a digital audit trail that strengthens governance, supports reporting and reduces risk.”

The platform enables businesses to generate detailed reports quickly, providing evidence of cleaning performance, service delivery and operational compliance.

A permanent shift in the cleaning industry

Cleaning Edge believes the future of the industry lies in technology-enabled service delivery.

“This is not about mops and buckets,” Figredo said.

“It is about intelligent systems, data and measurable outcomes.”

By investing heavily in proprietary technology, Cleaning Edge is positioning itself at the forefront of a new era in which cleaning services are defined by transparency, accountability and operational excellence.

“The expectations of businesses have changed permanently,” Figredo said.

“They want visibility and control and they also want proof. CESgo delivers that.”
