When a company becomes essential to its customers, price becomes irrelevant”

Mandy Parker

"There are only a handful of companies in any industry that customers feel they simply cannot live without—Apple, Amazon, Starbucks," says Mandy Parker CEO of Impress. "Our Google reviews show that Impress Computers has joined that elite group. Our customers don't stay with us because they have to. They stay because they trust us, we're consistent, and we make IT support easy."

Six Pillars of Brand Excellence

An analysis of Impress Computers' Google reviews reveals six fundamental principles that have made the company indispensable:

- Great Service & Expertise: Customers consistently praise the technical prowess and thoroughness of Impress's team. Issues aren't just fixed—they're solved comprehensively.
- Consistency & Reliability: Regardless of which team member or location a customer works with, the experience is uniformly excellent. Customers describe Impress as 'brilliant at the basics.'
- Ease of Doing Business: Response times measured in minutes, not hours. Remote support available immediately. Overnight replacements when needed. No bureaucratic obstacles.

- Employee Evangelists: Named team members like Paul, Joshua, Buddy, Felice, Ryan, Roy, and Jodel are specifically praised by customers. These aren't just technicians—they're trusted advisors.
- Educate vs. Sell: Impress recommends solutions based on customer needs, not what generates the biggest sale. One customer notes: 'They offer to expedite replacements rather than push unnecessary upgrades.'
- Personalized Experience: Small companies receive enterprise-level attention. Long-term customers feel genuinely valued. Each interaction is tailored to the customer's specific situation.
