

Influential Women Spotlights Christina L. Eckley: From Corporate Sales Leader to Purpose-Driven Novelist

GLADSTONE, IL, UNITED STATES, May 4, 2026 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Former Pitney Bowes Professional Channels Decades of Experience into Historical Fiction, Family Ventures, and Creative Legacy Building

Gladstone, Illinois — Christina “Tina” Eckley, a former corporate sales leader with more than two decades of experience in client-facing sales, account management, and business development, is redefining her professional journey through a bold and purposeful transition into fiction writing. Following a successful career that included tenure with Pitney Bowes and earlier roles in publishing and advertising, Tina retired from corporate life and has since devoted herself fully to the craft of storytelling.

Since 2021, Tina has worked as a freelance novelist, currently developing Malady, a work of mystery and intrigue. Her writing primarily focuses on historical fiction, with a particular interest in 18th-century women who forged independent lives despite restrictive societal norms. Through richly layered narratives, she explores themes of self-reliance, identity, ambition, and personal fulfillment—drawing from both her professional background and lived experience.

Although she has not yet published her work, Tina approaches writing with the same discipline, structure, and commitment that defined her corporate success. Her transition reflects a thoughtful evolution—one that blends creativity with the strategic mindset honed over years in business.

Tina credits her father's early encouragement and the unwavering support of her husband as foundational to her journey. Their influence helped instill the confidence and resilience necessary to pursue ambitious goals and embrace change. She encourages young women to follow their own paths with courage, emphasizing the importance of pursuing genuine passions, building supportive environments, and rejecting limiting expectations.

Grounded in strong personal values, Tina prioritizes family, discipline, and balance in both her professional and personal life. She believes in maintaining meaningful relationships while fostering health, purpose, and creativity. Her interests extend beyond writing to include farming, artisan food production, and hands-on projects that connect family and work.

Based on a family farm in the Midwest, Tina is also developing a smoked salmon and specialty foods venture in collaboration with her children, inspired by their commercial fishing work in Alaska. This endeavor reflects her entrepreneurial spirit and commitment to building a lasting, multigenerational legacy.

Through fiction, food, and community engagement, Christina "Tina" Eckley continues to demonstrate that reinvention is not only possible—but deeply meaningful when guided by passion, discipline, and purpose.
