Chief Investigator, Kyle Corrigan

What started as a single-state practice has grown into a regional investigative agency with national reach. Clients need more than a name on a vendor list. They need investigators who understand the local terrain, know how to document facts properly, and can coordinate reliable coverage when a matter crosses state lines.

Bright Line provides criminal defense investigations, insurance Special Investigations Unit support, surveillance, process service, security and firearms training, due diligence, and complex investigative services. The firm's model combines local and regional field experience with a vetted national network of investigators and broader professional intelligence relationships for due diligence, discreet inquiries, and international investigative needs.

Corrigan also serves in national leadership within the investigative profession. He is the Secretary of the National Council of Investigation and Security Services and serves on the organization's executive committee. Bright Line maintains international memberships with the World Association of Detectives and the International Intelligence Network, expanding the firm's access to professional investigative contacts and intelligence resources beyond the United States.

Bright Line's continued growth reflects a deliberate transition from a small local agency into a structured regional investigative platform, while maintaining the direct quality control and professional standards required in sensitive legal, insurance, and security matters.
