Over the past several years, GBU Life has experienced significant growth in its business and a consistent increase in its employee base. As part of the strategic review of its business infrastructure, the organization explored various options for its Home Office facility. This was in response to increasing renovation costs, limited functional space, and other constraints at its current location, where the life insurance and annuity provider has operated since 1960.

Following a careful evaluation, GBU Life selected Southpointe business park, an established business hub with convenient transportation access and a strong network of suppliers, professional services, and amenities that will support the organization’s evolving needs.

“The decision to develop our new Home Office facility in Southpointe positions GBU Life to best serve our members, distribution partners, and employees in the future,” said Bill Hunt, CEO of GBU Life. “By creating a more sustainable and collaborative work environment for our teams, we are better equipped to deliver our mission to provide the exceptional financial products and services GBU has been known for. This move also reaffirms our commitment to the greater Pittsburgh region, which has been our home for over 134 years.”

Jim Scalo, CEO of NAI Burns Scalo, an investment and advisory firm working with GBU Life, said, “Southpointe continues to see strong demand from companies seeking well-located, amenity-rich office environments. GBU Life’s decision reflects the ongoing momentum in the business park and its appeal to organizations planning for long-term growth.”

The new location supports GBU Life’s future growth and provides a more functional, sustainable environment for employees, advancing the organization’s long-term vision for innovative products and services, meaningful member benefits, and a stronger community impact in the communities they serve.
