Permaculture Pinup was created as a way to introduce people to regenerative living through beauty, creativity, embodiment, and hands-on experience.”

Enterprises announces the launch of a new experiential education initiative and retreat series under it's Permaculture Pinup campaign. The retreat series is designed to make regenerative living more accessible, engaging, and culturally creative for women and eco-curious participants.

Hosted at Green Wave House in Costa Rica and facilitated by Green Wave founder Janine “JIVANA” Jordan alongside collaborator KaytiBunny Roberts, the retreats will combine introductory permaculture education, tropical food forest immersion, medicinal plant learning, creative photography, and environmental stewardship activities into intimate small-group experiences. “We wanted to create something educational and meaningful while also being approachable and inspiring for people who may not traditionally see themselves reflected in the permaculture movement,” said Jordan, founder of Green Wave Enterprises.

All retreat formats include a Permaculture Principles 101 workshop, guided food forest tour, basic medicinal plant education and creative nature-based photography experiences. The two-day immersion additionally includes a Montezuma medicinal plant exploration, beach cleanup initiative with ocean stewardship themes, group transportation, meals, and a symbolic glass walk finale focused on resilience and personal transformation.

The retreats are intentionally limited to small groups of approximately 4–8 participants to preserve intimacy, hands-on learning, and personalized guidance.

Initial pricing is structured to remain accessible for local and regional participants. The first retreats are expected to begin later this year in the Southern Nicoya Peninsula region of Costa Rica.
