Pride Month brings a major increase in tourism and citywide events throughout New Orleans each June.”

— Karen Brem, Marketing Director, Historic Mardi Gras Inn

Organizers and local hospitality operators anticipate increased travel demand throughout June, particularly during major weekend events.

“We see Pride Month as one of the most active cultural periods of the year for New Orleans,” said Karen Brem, spokesperson for the Historic Mardi Gras Inn. “The city experiences a significant increase in visitors coming in for Pride-related events, festivals, and entertainment throughout June.”

Pride programming in New Orleans typically spans multiple weeks, with events distributed across the French Quarter, Marigny, and surrounding entertainment districts. Major highlights include New Orleans Black Pride Weekend, Pridefest block events, and the city’s annual Pride Parade, which attracts both residents and visitors from across the United States.

Local hospitality businesses report that June has become one of the highest-demand periods of the summer season due to overlapping festivals, cultural tourism, and LGBTQ+ travel.

The Historic Mardi Gras Inn noted that Pride Month continues to be a significant period for citywide tourism activity, particularly in areas adjacent to the French Quarter where many events take place.

City officials and event organizers encourage visitors planning to attend Pride Month events to make accommodations early due to expected high occupancy levels across central New Orleans neighborhoods.
