Fernwayer, the curated travel marketplace, announces its latest experiential travel portfolio in Peru. Globally renowned for Machu Picchu, the Incan citadel that continues to beguile archaeologists, this Latin American country is a land of staggering contrasts where Pacific waves crash beneath desert cliffs, Amazonian rainforests pulse with diverse ecosystems and ancient cultures, and creativity spills from far-flung workshops and contemporary kitchens alike.

Take a three-hour stroll around Lima's most atmospheric district with a local guide who will unravel the area's past and spotlight creative hubs.

Peru is ancient, ornate, and deeply continuous. You see that in the way Indigenous knowledge, regional identity, artistry, and modern life hold together as one living cultural fabric.”

Launching in Lima, Cusco, and the Sacred Valley, Fernwayer's private tours in Peru are led by passionate hosts with deep ties to their communities. Travelers will learn about civilizations that predate the Incas while connecting with Peru's living culture through hands-on experiences, shared meals, and personal storytelling.

"Peru has always felt to me like one of the most culturally complete countries in the world," says Vinitaa Jayson, Fernwayer's co-founder. "It is ancient, ornate, and deeply continuous. You see that in the way Indigenous knowledge, regional identity, artistry, and modern life hold together as one living cultural fabric. That was the thinking behind Fernwayer's experiences here. We did not want to stop at Peru's icons or monuments. We wanted to build experiences with people who could reveal the country's deeper texture — the memory, craft, and creativity that make it so singular."

Bringing this philosophy to life, Fernwayer's Experience Makers in Peru include archaeologists, historians, artists, photographers, chefs, and Indigenous collectives. Through these experiences, travelers will meet local fishermen along the Pacific coast, connect with grassroots organizations in urban neighborhoods, or share lunch with artisan families in the Andes.

SUSTAINABLE, LOCAL-ORIENTED EXPERIENCES IN LIMA

Fernwayer's city tours explore Lima's neighborhoods, contrasting the historic charm of Barranco, a bohemian seaside district, with the modern high-rises and parks of Miraflores. Travelers can undertake sensory explorations of Pueblo Libre, the oldest part of the city, and Lima's historic center through walking tours accented by local flavors, contemporary art, and family-run businesses. Those with a creative eye may explore Lima's coastline and markets with a professional photographer, spectating on and capturing scenes of everyday life.

As part of Fernwayer's commitment to social impact, the marketplace partners with Peruvian-owned initiatives that welcome travelers into private residences, artist studios, and fishing communities, creating meaningful cultural exchange while supporting local economies.

HERITAGE TOURS LED BY ARCHAEOLOGISTS AND FIELD EXPERTS

Fernwayer's archaeologist-led tours allow travelers to dig deeper into the history of Cusco and the surrounding region. By visiting museums and sacred sites such as Saqsaywaman with a local archaeologist, travelers will piece together layers of history from pre-Incan and pre-Columbian civilizations through the Inca Empire and Spanish colonial period, gaining a deeper understanding of one of South America's most historically significant regions. An evening may be spent at an archaeology salon, discussing Andean cosmology with a distinguished researcher over coffee. Travelers in Lima can explore the wonders of the Larco Museum and a nearby "huaca" with a former site guide. As for visitors eager to see Peru's headline attraction, they can

PERU'S GASTRONOMIC HERITAGE

Food plays a central role in all Fernwayer tours in Peru. Travelers can participate in market tours and cooking experiences in Lima that showcase Indigenous methods and express how immigration has influenced the food scene. They can meet the fishermen whose daily catches supply kitchens across the city. These experiences connect travelers directly with the people behind Peru's celebrated cuisine, from traditional ingredients to contemporary culinary innovation. Those looking to elevate their time in Lima may dine under the moonlight at Huaca Pucllana with a former site guide.

COMMUNITY-FOCUSED ADVENTURES IN CUSCO & THE SACRED VALLEY

In the Sacred Valley, travelers can connect with Indigenous communities through intimate experiences focused on textile traditions, medicinal plants, and Andean agriculture — gaining a comprehensive understanding of pastoral life. Besides hands-on craft experiences, these experiences provide insight into traditions that have been preserved for generations and remain central to Andean identity today. Travelers may also experience an authentic Pachamama ceremony, after hiking to the slopes of the rainbow-streaked Palccoyo Mountain.
