The award is the result of comprehensive measurement and evaluation of hundreds of applicants. The process involved a detailed employee survey conducted by Quantum Workplace, covering critical elements such as management effectiveness, perks, professional development, and overall company culture. Each company's benefits were also audited to determine the overall score. Opus is honored to be included among the 507 companies recognized this year.

“Everyone says that culture is what sets their company apart, so I think it's important to name what you mean when you talk about your culture. Opus' culture thrives on full ownership of the problem and the solution from everyone on the team,” said Rachael Nemeth, CEO and Co-Founder of Opus. “I'm grateful Opus is among Inc.'s Best Workplaces because this recognition highlights the strength of the culture we hold, which means a team full of owners that work together, build together and have each other's backs.”

Opus is the training operations platform built specifically for the service industry.

In people-driven businesses, consistent brand experience depends on every employee knowing what good looks like and being supported to deliver it. Setting standards through initial training isn't enough. They have to be reinforced and continuously validated, because that's what actually produces consistent outcomes. Working across industries — including restaurants, hospitality, fitness and consumer services — Opus helps drive consistency through a platform that is simple and accessible enough for everyone in the business to use. That allows brands to scale their standards as fast as they scale their footprint.

The Best Workplaces recognition comes after Opus recently announced Series B funding and was named one of Fast Company's Most Innovative Companies in 2026.

“This year’s Best Workplaces list goes beyond great company culture — it highlights companies making meaningful and sustained investment in their employees,” says Bonny Ghosh, editorial director at Inc. “Even in a labor market that favors employers, these companies understand that an intentional and authentic commitment to their teams drives stronger employee retention, engagement, and ultimately, a stronger business overall.”
