helping solo attorneys and small law firms establish the professional presence they need to compete in an increasingly AI-powered legal industry, as a deepened partnership between legal AI startup Harvey AI and Paris-based Mistral AI brings sophisticated tools for contract analysis, due diligence, compliance, and litigation support to legal teams around the world. Solo practitioners and small firms can access a virtual office for attorneys to establish a prestigious business address that meets certain state bar association requirements, stay connected with clients through live receptionist services, and project the professionalism their practice deserves, all without the overhead of full-time traditional office space.

Attorneys already trust Opus to provide the complete professional infrastructure a modern law practice needs, including business addresses that meet certain state bar association requirements for firm registration, mail forwarding, access to meeting rooms and day offices for in-person client consultations, and a dedicated business phone line. As AI continues to transform the legal profession, Opus ensures that professional presence is never what holds a small firm back from competing at the highest level.

The Harvey AI and Mistral partnership, which expands AI model availability to legal teams across the European Union and beyond, reflects a broader shift in how legal work gets done. AI is rapidly lowering the barrier to entry for work that once required large teams and significant resources, giving solo attorneys and boutique firms the ability to operate with the efficiency of much larger practices. For these professionals, pairing AI-powered workflows with a strong professional infrastructure is the next logical step toward building a competitive, modern practice.

"The attorneys embracing both technology and smart business solutions are the ones who will lead the next era of legal practice," said Yori Galel, CEO of Opus Virtual Offices. "AI is giving solo practitioners and small firms capabilities that were once out of reach. Opus makes sure a professional address and presence are never what holds them back."
