BOSTON, MA, UNITED STATES, June 2, 2026 /EINPresswire.com/ -- TheAnswerPage.com, a nationally recognized provider of accredited continuing medical education, has launched Cannabis Medicine: A Comprehensive Clinical Guide, a new 6-credit CME/CE program created to help clinicians, hospital systems, medical societies, and state medical cannabis programs address the rapidly expanding educational needs surrounding cannabis in clinical practice.

Clinicians in all specialties are seeing patients who use cannabis. The question is not whether healthcare professionals will encounter these patients..it's are they adequately prepared when they do?”

Stephen B. Corn, MD

The new program combines two newly released accredited courses:

- Cannabis and Cannabinoids in Clinical Practice \(4 CME/CE credits\)
- Cannabis Use Disorder and Cannabinoid Hyperemesis Syndrome (2 CME/CE credits)

Together, the courses provide a broad clinical foundation in cannabinoid pharmacology, therapeutic evidence, the clinical effects of cannabis use, adverse effects, drug interactions, perioperative considerations, psychiatric implications, Cannabis Use Disorder (CUD), Cannabinoid Hyperemesis Syndrome (CHS), and practical patient counseling.

The launch comes at a time when many states continue to require or strongly encourage cannabis-related education for clinicians participating in medical cannabis programs. At the same time, the recent federal rescheduling of medical cannabis has intensified interest from healthcare organizations seeking credible, evidence-based educational resources for their clinicians.

“Hospital systems, medical societies, and state programs are recognizing that cannabis is no longer a niche topic,” said Stephen B. Corn, MD. “Clinicians across virtually every specialty are now caring for patients who use cannabis products. The question is no longer whether healthcare professionals will encounter these patients — it’s whether they are adequately prepared when they do.”

TheAnswerPage.com designed the new 6-credit program to address real-world clinical challenges increasingly faced by healthcare organizations and practicing clinicians. The courses were developed by Meredith Fisher-Corn, MD, a board-certified anesthesiologist who works closely with state Departments of Health, medical societies, and healthcare organizations involved in clinician education initiatives.

“When I write these courses, I keep the needs of hospital systems, state medical cannabis programs, and frontline clinicians in mind,” said Meredith Fisher-Corn, MD. “Healthcare organizations need practical, balanced education that helps clinicians understand the science, recognize risks, communicate effectively with patients, and navigate an evolving clinical and regulatory environment responsibly.”

The new bundle is designed for physicians, nurse practitioners, nurses, physician assistants, pharmacists, and other healthcare professionals who encounter cannabis-related questions in everyday clinical practice.
