Ursula Leon - Best Selling Author

Meet Ursula Leon Hernandez:

Ursula M. Leon Hernandez is a union electrician with more than twenty years of experience working on major construction, utility, and industrial projects within the United States. Born in Puebla, Mexico and raised in the U.S., she built her career through grit, perseverance, and the quiet strength required to show up every day in environments where she was often the only woman—and the only Latina—on the jobsite.

Throughout her career, Ursula has contributed to highly complex and iconic projects, including the Las Vegas Sphere, nuclear and hydroelectric facilities, substations, data centers, and large-scale casino developments. Each jobsite sharpened her understanding of how communication, respect, and human connection directly affect safety, teamwork, and the overall culture of a crew.

These experiences planted the early seeds of what she now calls EVOL, a movement focused on empathy, emotional intelligence, and human-centered leadership in construction. EVOL reflects her belief that the trades are at their strongest when people feel seen, respected, and heard.

Ursula is not stepping into leadership from afar—she is building this work from the ground up, carrying the hands-on expertise, union values, and field wisdom that shaped her.

Ursula’s mission is simple: to evolve the way the industry leads. She believes every system—whether electrical or human—functions better when its connections are grounded in intention, respect, and empathy.
