Our new website reflects our commitment to making authentic wedding storytelling more accessible, helping couples explore our work and connect with us effortlessly.”

A Growing Need for an Online Presence

Like every other small and emerging brand and business, Weddings By Doorbean was also relying on referrals and personal connections to reach out to new clients. During client meetings and one on one interactions, they showcased their work by utilizing basic/traditional tools and software, including PowerPoint presentations. Also, the company usually shared its portfolio directly with the potential clients once they were in the stage of interaction.

This approach undoubtedly helped the business connect with interested clients. However, it also brought various new challenges. Apart from referrals and personal connections, there are numerous people out there looking for immersive, reliable, precise, and unique photography and videography services. But the company was losing out on those clients as they did not have a single way to learn about Weddings By Doorbean and view its work through online platforms. And as technology and digital platforms increasingly become an important part of customer decision making, the need for a dedicated online presence actually became very clear.

The photography firm made up its mind that it was indeed the right time to move beyond traditional methods of showcasing their work to attract clients and move to a precise and accessible platform that allowed interested customers to seamlessly explore what all they offered, view previous works, and connect with the concerned team within a few seconds.

Building a Platform for the Future

The freshly designed and developed website contains all the necessary and relevant information about Weddings by Doorbean, including its work portfolio, services offered, and the brand story, all in one place. The respective online platform has been specifically designed in a way that offers customers with a simple yet seamless experience. Instead of relying on offline presentations, the photography company is now capable of showing its work to a much wider audience on its dedicated digital platform.

The respective brands strongly feel that the new website will significantly assist them in improving accessibility for potential clients, and at the same time, will also make it easier for them to continuously share the recently completed projects and other creative works. The director of Weddings by Doorbean shared his views related to the same.

He stated, 'The launch of this robust website is indeed a very big step for us. It has been many years since we have established ourselves as a reputable wedding photography and videography company in Faridabad and have been capturing beautiful memories for our clients. But now, we actually have a platform that will help us regularly share our work and will also allow our prospective clients to see our work, understand our style, and connect with us. We strongly believe that this new website will definitely help us reach out to new customers while still staying true to what we do best.'

Support Behind the Project

In order to facilitate this online presence development, Weddings By Doorbean decided to closely work with D'Art Design, a reputed firm providing 360 degree marketing services across both online and offline channels. Through its subsidiary, Dart Digital Agency, the company helped the brand strengthen its digital presence and execute its website development objectives effectively. Both the firms closely coordinated to ensure a seamless web development process. The digital agency first understood the photography firm's work, requirements, and expectations. The gathered information was utilized to develop a web design that was further executed into a fully functional platform.

With regular discussion and approvals at different stages, the web development project followed a very collaborative and aligned approach that ensured that the finalized website did not just provide Weddings By Doorbean with an online presence but actually reflected its vision, mission, services, and requirements.

Sharing his views on this, Abhey Singh, the director at Weddings By Doorbean, commented, 'We approached D'Art Design (the parent company) because we were looking for digital solutions that could accurately represent our brand and services through different online platforms. By connecting our team with Dart Digital Agency (the subsidiary), we were able to closely monitor the entire process. This coordination and transparency ensured that our website perfectly aligned with our requirements and expectations as well.'

Digital Platforms Becoming Important for Creative Businesses

Across different industries, almost all, the number of brands and businesses investing in digital platforms to improve their overall visibility and connect with new customers is heavily increasing. Organizations operating in the photography and videography sectors are also understanding the need and importance of showcasing their work and hence, adopting different ways to establish their online presence.

For Weddings By Doorbean, this respective launch doesn't just represent a new website. It goes way beyond that and instead reflects the photography company's efforts to adapt to changing customer needs, expectations, and preferences, and further develop ways that facilitate easier access to its services.

Since the online platform is now live and can be accessed via the internet, the company is still focusing more on capturing genuine and unique wedding moments so that it can better demonstrate its work to interested customers who are eagerly searching for reliable and unique photography and videography services online.
