

Caregiverlist® Approved for Nevada Cultural Competency Training

Nevada Health Authority approved Caregiver Training University's cultural competency training, a state-compliant online course for healthcare professionals.

NV, UNITED STATES, June 9, 2026 /EINPresswire.com/ -- The Nevada Health Authority (NVHA), Bureau of Health Care Quality and Compliance (HCQC) has approved Caregiver Training University's 6-Hour Cultural Competency Training curriculum and added it as a resource for Nevada companies. The approval confirms that the course meets the requirements under Nevada Revised Statutes (NRS) 449.103, which mandates cultural competency training for professional caregivers and senior home care agencies.

The approval expands Caregiver Training University's role as a digital training provider for in-home caregivers and senior care professionals seeking state-approved training. Nevada law requires cultural competency training that helps caregivers better understand and support patients and residents from diverse cultural backgrounds, including individuals of different racial, ethnic, religious, gender, disability, and age groups.

The Caregiverlist® Nevada Cultural Competency Training certification addresses key areas, including:

- patient care context
- discriminatory practices and language prevention

- experiences of individuals from marginalized communities

For caregivers, cultural competency extends beyond compliance. It is a practical skill that directly affects the quality of daily care. Caregivers providing care in the home often work in highly personal environments. Communication, trust, privacy, customs, language, and dignity play an essential role in building positive care relationships. The training helps caregivers recognize individual needs, reduce assumptions, and deliver respectful, informed, person-centered care.

The six-hour cultural competency online course shows that caregivers provide better care when they notice how culture, bias, and barriers in the system shape each patient's experience. Caregivers cannot treat cultural competency as a box to check once and forget. They must keep listening, reflecting, and learning from their interactions with patients. The course teaches that caregivers can harm patients even without intending to. Implicit bias can shape decisions, such as when caregivers take one patient's pain less seriously than another's. Neutral-looking policies, like English-only communication or strict visiting rules, can make care harder for patients who rely on interpreters, family support, or cultural practices.

The course also encourages caregivers to practice cultural humility by asking each patient about their needs and preferences instead of making assumptions. Ask questions about their preferences on food, religion, family involvement, communication, and comfort. It reminds caregivers to use respectful, person-first language. It also teaches that aging, functional decline, or developmental disabilities do not take away a person's intelligence, dignity, or right to participate in their own care.

Nevada Administrative Code 449.011931 requires home health agencies to provide approved cultural competency training within 90 days of hiring or contracting with an employee and at least once every two years thereafter. Training provided every two years must include a minimum of two hours of instruction.
