According to CrispyBull’s editorial team, the 2026 selections reflect broader trends emerging across the crypto and trading markets, including stronger emphasis on trust, multi-asset trading environments, crypto-native infrastructure and retail-focused services.

eToro was recognized for maintaining one of the most accessible investing ecosystems among mainstream brokers. Kraken received recognition for its exchange quality and crypto-native trading infrastructure, while Interactive Brokers was selected for its advanced multi-asset trading environment. Swissquote earned recognition for its regulated banking environment and customer support structure. XBO.com received the innovation award for building a retail-focused crypto ecosystem centered around accessibility and integrated crypto services.

The evaluation process considered factors including platform usability, crypto offerings, customer support, operational transparency and relevance to crypto users.

“Trading platforms are no longer competing only on trading features or asset listings,” said Yoram Azrak, founder of CrispyBull. “Users increasingly care about trust, usability and how confidently they can navigate a platform during fast-moving market conditions. The awards are designed to recognize companies responding to those expectations in a meaningful way.”
