As part of this special initiative, young artists Nylah Star and Allyn King, siblings and independent singers from New Jersey, are joining forces for the first time to perform a song that aims to inspire families, children, and soccer fans around the world.

The musical production combines rhythms and sounds representative of diverse cultures, including influences from Brazil, Spain, the Dominican Republic, and the United States, reflecting the multicultural spirit that characterizes the Tri-State region and the most important sporting event on the planet.

The song's central message is summed up in its chorus: "The ball doesn't get dirty; it's played with love."

The official music video was filmed with the participation of children from twelve different nationalities, highlighting the unity, friendship, and harmony that sports can foster across cultures.

The world premiere of "Nueva York es el Mundo" will take place during a special broadcast of The Nylah and Allyn Show, an international children's and educational program distributed in over 30 countries and watched by millions of families via digital platforms and traditional media.

"Yo Quiero Mi Boleta" Contest

"We want this song to bring families together and for children to be part of the excitement of the World Cup," said Andres Duran, the TV show's producer. "It's a gift for all our followers and an opportunity for them to have an experience they'll remember for a lifetime."

Ricardo Díaz De La Vega, CEO of Epic Dreams World, noted that this collaboration aims to inspire people to believe in their dreams and demonstrate that extraordinary experiences can be within anyone's reach.

"We believe that dreams have the power to transform lives. Our goal is to create unforgettable moments, inspire new generations, and connect people with unique opportunities that generate excitement, hope, and inspiration. If we can also support and inspire children and families, our mission becomes even more meaningful," said Díaz De La Vega.
