Out of Order - Poster

Out of Order follows John Slater (Routh), a disheveled young lawyer who tries to win back his glamorous ex by landing a job at a high-powered law firm, only to end up representing both sides of the same lawsuit, in disguise. What follows is a dizzying dual-identity farce involving secret aliases, fake mustaches, and a pharmaceutical giant with plenty to hide. A perfect fish-out-of-water comedy, Out of Order is a comedic tour de force led by Routh's unstoppable cinematic double life, offering comedy gold on screen with standout moments alongside Huntington and Shields. This is a true return to the comedies helmed by Robin Williams, Jim Carrey, and other legends who defined a generation of cinema.

The film is directed by Guy Jacobson from an original screenplay by Jacobson and Megan Freels Johnston.

Produced by Aimee Schoof and Isen Robbins alongside Chris Bongirne, Stephen Tedeschi, Katy Donnelly, Jesse Manning and Brandon Routh. Out of Order is a tour de force performance by Routh, combining classic situational comedy with a sharp contemporary edge and a standout legendary ensemble cast.

"Out of Order has been a passion project from the beginning," said Jacobson. "We wanted to make a smart, fast-moving comedy driven by character and performance, and it's been incredibly rewarding to see audiences all over the world responding the way they have."
