Beginning with a delicate, atmospheric introduction before gradually unfolding into a slow-burning blues-rock confession, "Tired Of Being Right" finds Joanne at her most emotionally vulnerable. The song chronicles the realization that love alone cannot change someone who refuses to change themselves, even after years of patience, sacrifice, and second chances.

"A very personal song for me," Joanne shares. "A song about always holding out hope that the one you love might finally step up but sadly sometimes you have to give yourself clarity and permission to leave. Sometimes people will never change no matter how long you invest in them."

That emotional reckoning echoes throughout the song's lyrics. Lines like "The truth's never kind and hope, boy, does she linger on" and "I'm tired of being right about you being wrong" capture the exhaustion of repeatedly confronting a reality you never wanted to accept. Rather than exploding into anger, Joanne delivers the song with hard-earned wisdom, allowing its emotional weight to build naturally as the story unfolds.

The accompanying music video brings those themes to life through the story of a couple trapped in a relationship neither can fully let go of. Intercut with performance footage of Joanne, the video mirrors the song's push and pull between love, disappointment, and acceptance, ultimately arriving at the same difficult conclusion reflected in the lyrics.

"Tired Of Being Right" is the latest preview of The Trouble With Love, Joanne's highly anticipated new studio album produced by Kevin Shirley. On the album, Joanne dives headfirst into the beautiful chaos of the human heart, exploring the many forms love takes in our lives: the reckless kind that sweeps you off your feet, the quiet kind that steadies you, the kind that breaks you open, and the kind that puts you back together.

The new single follows a string of acclaimed releases that have steadily revealed different sides of the album's emotional landscape. The title track "The Trouble With Love" featuring Joe Bonamassa, explored the addictive push and pull of romance, while "What Good Is My Love?" featuring Orianthi confronted the pain of love that isn't returned. "Hell Or High Water" delivered a defiant blues-gospel message of perseverance and self-belief, while "This Is Who I Am" offered a moving reflection on acceptance and self-worth. Together, the songs point toward one of Joanne's most personal and fully realized albums to date.

The album also arrives on the heels of the widespread success of Black & Gold, which earned some of the strongest reviews of Joanne's career. Classic Rock awarded the album a 9/10 rating, while Powerplay Magazine praised its "pop appeal and smoothness." Guitarist Magazine noted that it "reinforces Joanne's place in the firmament of today's brightest stars," and American Blues Scene called it "a deeply personal experience, showcasing the depth of Joanne's artistry."

The release comes as Joanne continues another busy year on the road. Following a successful run of European festival appearances, she is currently touring across the United States throughout the summer before launching a newly announced Fall 2026 headline tour across the Southwest, Mountain West, Pacific Northwest, and California. Known for her commanding stage presence, fiery guitar work, and emotionally immersive performances, Joanne continues to captivate audiences with a live show that blends new material with fan favorites from across her acclaimed catalog.
