While the interest for studying medicine in Uzbekistan is growing exponentially, Indian medical aspirants also continue to explore MBBS in Russia, one of the top destinations and the other is MBBS in Georgia. These two countries are also known for their WHO and NMC-recognised medical schools, high-standard education, and affordable tuition fees. But Uzbekistan is second to none for studying MBBS among other countries because of its academic excellence, affordability, safety and supportive learning environment.

The consultancy has noted that a great number of students are now exploring top countries rather than traditional options. Destinations like Russia, Georgia, or Kazakhstan have already become the foremost choice for studying medicine. These days, Uzbekistan has also become popular due to its combination of globally recognised medical schools, low tuition fees, state-of-the-art infrastructure, and excellent academic environment.

It also stated that most students search for those countries that provide a balance between quality medical education and financial accessibility. Considering this scenario, medical universities in Uzbekistan have become a preferred choice for those who look for a globally recognised MBBS degree without spending higher tuition fees associated with other international destinations.

Speaking on the trend of studying medicine in Uzbekistan in 2026, a spokesperson from Education Vibes said, “Medical aspirants today conduct more research before they finalise a country or university. They look at the recognition, curriculum, quality of education, clinical rotation, safety, accommodation, and, importantly, the tuition fees.” MBBS in Uzbekistan has gained attention among students because it addresses several of these benefits.

The consultancy further stated that most students pay attention to the teacher-to-student ratio, high-end simulated laboratories, teaching methodology, and student support services offered to international students. These are some of the key factors that medical students consider apart from tuition fees and accommodation. They said, students and their families now seek clarity when they consider studying MBBS abroad, which is why the demand has grown for getting transparent information, such as the admission process, documentation, visa process and post-study work opportunities.

In accordance with Education Vibes, English medium education is another factor that has attracted students to study medicine in Uzbekistan. Three premier WHO and NMC-approved institutions, namely, Samarkand State Medical University, Tashkent Medical Academy and Fergana State University, allow international students to pursue medicine in English.

It also highlighted the recent FMGE passing percentage of top medical universities in Uzbekistan, where Tashkent Medical Academy recorded a passing percentage of 42.86%, and Samarkand State Medical University 22.06% and the overall passing percentage of 23.94% shows the growing academic standards and excellence in medical education in the country.

The consultancy added that medical education remains a researched MBBS abroad category among Indian medical aspirants. Students explore global destinations due to limited seats in government universities and high tuition fees in private medical schools. Whereas top medical universities abroad align with their career goals and budget.

Education Vibes stated that it will continue monitoring student preferences, especially the top overseas destinations for studying medicine that would be budget-friendly for them. Further, it showed a continued interest in MBBS in Uzbekistan as international medical aspirants evaluate multiple pathways for MBBS in 2026 and beyond.
