

New Microschool Opens in Russellville, Offering Families a Personalized Educational Option

New K-8 microschool in Russellville offers personalized learning, small class sizes, and individualized instruction for local families.

RUSSELLVILLE, AR, UNITED STATES, June 16, 2026 /EINPresswire.com/ -- John and Ashly Crawford, owners of Huntington Learning Center of Russellville, have announced the launch of Microschool Powered by Huntington, a new K-8 educational option designed to provide students with a more personalized learning experience through small class sizes, individualized instruction, and strong parent partnerships.

Every child learns differently. Our microschool was created to provide a personalized, supportive learning environment where students can build confidence, strengthen skills, and succeed.”

The microschool will begin serving students for the 2026-2027 school year and is currently accepting applications for grades K-8. Enrollment is limited, allowing the school to maintain a 6:1 student-to-teacher ratio and provide focused attention to each student.

“A growing number of families are looking for alternatives that offer both academic rigor and individualized support,” said John Crawford, Owner and Center Director of Huntington Learning Center of Russellville. “Our goal is to create an environment where students are known, supported, and challenged at the level they need to succeed.”

The school is designed to serve a variety of learners, including students who may feel overwhelmed in larger classroom settings, students seeking additional academic challenge, and families looking for a more individualized educational experience. The microschool also provides targeted academic interventions and supports for students with learning differences when appropriate.

Since opening Huntington Learning Center of Russellville in November 2024, the Crawfords have worked with students across the River Valley in reading, math, writing, study skills, ACT preparation, SAT preparation, and academic enrichment. The new microschool expands that mission by offering a full-time educational environment focused on building skills, confidence, and a love of learning.

"Huntington has spent nearly 50 years helping students succeed academically," said Ashly Crawford. "We are excited to bring that experience into a full-time school setting that allows students to learn in a way that is personalized to their needs while still providing structure, accountability, and meaningful relationships."

The microschool is accredited through Huntington's Middle States Association accreditation and will follow a Monday through Friday schedule aligned with local district calendars. Families will receive regular progress updates, parent-teacher conferences, and individualized learning plans designed to help students make meaningful academic growth.

Enrollment for the 2026-2027 school year is now open, with limited seats available.
