The evening will also include hospitality activations, live music, wellness experiences, community partners, and charitable support benefiting My Friend's Place, a Los Angeles-based organization serving unhoused youth.

"Pride Night Out was created to build meaningful space for connection during Pride—beyond performance, beyond spectacle—bringing people together in a way that feels intentional, inclusive, and grounded in community," said organizers from Hyperion.

Now in its third year, Pride Night Out continues to establish itself as a recurring cultural moment within Los Angeles' Pride programming calendar, bridging entertainment, media, business, hospitality, and advocacy communities in an intimate setting designed to foster authentic dialogue and collaboration.
