

Backorder.com Sets Out What a Domain Backorder Is, and What It Is Not

MANCHESTER, UNITED KINGDOM, June 29, 2026 /EINPresswire.com/ -- A domain backorder is best understood as a dedicated attempt to register a name, not a promise that the name will be obtained. Backorder.com, a service operated by Backorder Ltd, monitors expired domain names that are nearing release and attempts to register a chosen name the moment it becomes available again. Because other individuals or services may pursue the same name, the company is clear that placing a backorder gives a registrant a genuine attempt during the release window rather than a guaranteed result.

Eligibility is defined by where a name sits in the registry lifecycle. Only names that have already expired and passed through the redemption and deletion stages, reaching what registries term pending delete, can be backordered. A name that is still registered, or that has not yet completed deletion, cannot. Registrants can search Backorder.com to confirm which names are currently eligible, browsing pending delete lists or searching keywords to backorder domains across more than 20 country code top-level domains, among them .io, .ai, .uk, .eu, .nl and .me.

The service also sets out the controls a registrant retains. Accounts that have not yet made a successful payment can hold up to five backorders at any one time, with that limit removed once a successful registration has been completed. A backorder can be cancelled while it remains before the scheduled drop, and for names with a specific drop time, cancellation must be made at least sixty minutes ahead. Once a registration attempt has been made, it can no longer be cancelled.

Where a single registrant has backordered a name and the attempt succeeds, the name is allocated to that registrant. Where more than one party has backordered the same name, it is resolved through a private auction held only among those who placed a backorder, with no additional bidders introduced. Attempts that do not succeed carry no charge.

Outcomes are confirmed to registrants by email. Backorder.com notes that direct accreditation with certain registries can provide visibility of some names up to two weeks before their release. As a specialist backorder domain service, it concentrates on country code extensions that broader providers often overlook and presents its platform in English, German, Spanish, French and Italian.
