

Celebrity Jet Charter Expands Empty-Leg Availability on Four Florida Routes

Celebrity Jet Charter has extended empty-leg flight availability on four corridors linking the Northeast and Midwest to Florida, including Chicago to Fort Myers

FORT MYERS, FL, UNITED STATES, June 17, 2026 /EINPresswire.com/ --

Celebrity Jet Charter has expanded its empty-leg flight offerings by opening availability on four corridors connecting the Northeast and Midwest to Florida: Philadelphia to Naples, Teterboro to Boca Raton, New Castle to Sarasota, and Chicago to Fort Myers.

The flights reposition aircraft that would otherwise return without passengers, and their availability follows the seasonal movement of private travel toward Florida.

Empty legs are a byproduct of how charter aviation operates. When an aircraft completes a one-way trip, it frequently has to reposition. That's because it's returning to its base or moving on to its next booking, and that leg would otherwise fly without passengers. Making those seats available lets the flight carry travelers rather than fly empty. The defining constraint is that the schedule is set by the aircraft's existing obligations, so dates and timing are fixed rather than open to selection.

The four corridors announced reflect where that supply currently concentrates. As demand for southbound flights into Florida rises, aircraft accumulate at Florida airports and must return north, generating repositioning legs along the reverse of the busiest routes. Philadelphia to Naples and Teterboro to Boca Raton trace the Northeast's movement toward the Gulf and Atlantic coasts, New Castle to Sarasota connects the Mid-Atlantic to Florida's west coast, and Chicago to Fort Myers reflects the same pattern from the Midwest. Each corridor pairs a northern city with a destination in Southwest or South Florida.

"The opening of these routes reflects current aircraft positioning patterns tied to seasonal demand," said Dennis B. Adams, CEO of Celebrity Jet Charter. "Empty-leg availability changes as charter activity evolves, and these corridors represent the routes currently available through the company's network."

The terms differ from a standard charter. A private jet rental booked as a full charter sets its own departure time and route, while a repositioning flight follows a schedule already determined by other bookings. That distinction shapes who tends to use empty legs: travelers whose plans are firm but whose timing can adjust to where an aircraft already needs to go. Availability also shifts continuously, since each new charter booking changes where aircraft are positioned and which return legs come open.

Availability on these flights depends on aircraft type, route length, and scheduling factors. Because supply is generated by existing charter activity, a route available now may not recur later in the season. Celebrity Jet Charter coordinates repositioning flights alongside its on-demand charter operation, which reaches more than 10,000 airports across the United States, Europe, the Caribbean, and Latin America.

The corridors listed here reflect a single point in the season. The company maintains its current set of repositioning routes on a dedicated empty-leg flights page, which is kept up to date as routes enter and leave the schedule.

The announcement reflects a wider practice in private aviation, where operators publish repositioning availability rather than treat empty legs as unrecoverable cost. The four Florida corridors represent the current set of routes Celebrity Jet Charter has opened, a list that moves with the season as aircraft reposition in response to demand.
