Delaware Accident Statistics

The most recent statistics from the Delaware Department of Transportation suggest that serious accidents aren't going away any time soon. In 2024, there were 127 fatal crashes and 5,094 crashes involving a personal injury, with a fifth of those accidents happening in Sussex County.

Right Lawyers. Right Now."

To put that in perspective, that's a death rate of 12.73 per 100,000 people in Delaware. While this was lower than in 2023, the year-to-date statistics for fatal accidents in 2026 are quickly outpacing previous years. Thus, the risk remains heightened for anyone driving on the road in Delaware.

What Is a Personal Injury Claim?

A personal injury claim is essentially the process of seeking financial compensation from someone responsible for harming the claimant. Typically, they arise from a variety of causes, including negligence, carelessness, or intentional injury. The most common of these is due to negligence of another party. For example, if someone runs a red light and T-bones another car, injuring the other driver in the process, that would be classified as negligence in most circumstances.

In the process of proving a personal injury claim, claimants must show that the other party owed them a duty of care. Then, they must show that they breached that duty which directly led to the claimant's injuries or other quantifiable harm. That harm is referred to as damages and includes things like lost wages, medical bills, and more.

What Victims Often Don't Know

After an accident, it's not uncommon for people to question whether they need a Lewes personal injury lawyer. Some injuries don't show symptoms for several days or weeks following an accident. In those cases, victims may hesitate to call a law firm. However, that can damage their case if they wait too long. This is because personal injury claims have a statute of limitations or time limit in which they must be filed. In Delaware, that statute of limitations is two years from the date of injury.
