If somebody does call and I'm happy to take on their case, I'll throw my heart into it to get them over the line.”

were ordinary individuals who had made mistakes or found themselves in tough circumstances. He completed his law degree and became a criminal defence lawyer.

has resulted in thousands of successful outcomes. Michael is committed to providing reliable and high-quality defence services to his clients, who are seeking justice in criminal and violence-related cases, and getting them out of trouble. He has been recognised with various legal awards throughout his career. Michael offers flexible meeting options, including office visits and online consultations via WhatsApp for clients' convenience.

Interesting Cases Michael Handled

Michael finds all the cases are interesting, where he said "every person I find very interesting." Michael recalls one of the clients has a passion for reptiles and regularly imported snakes and spiders. Authorities initially mistaken that the client was trafficking the reptiles, Michael successfully argued that the importations were strictly for a lawful personal collection proving that clients liked reptiles.

Michael believes all people make mistakes and deserve fair representation in the case. He thinks, "if somebody does call and I'm happy to take on their case, I'll throw my heart into it to get them over the line."

Uplifting Clients Through Complex Legal Challenges

Nowadays, Legal defence is quite different from what it was a year ago. According to Michael, "Good people make mistakes, and as you know, there are so many laws out there at the moment and we have all made mistakes, but I think the best way is to serve first and not judge people and really give your all to help to uplift that person and get them through the tough times". Whether it is a no conviction outcome, saving a license, or protecting their travel record, Michael ensures that he provides excellent guidance to get through the tough times.

He believes that people who understand the legal system and feel comfortable in appearing in court or communicating with prosecutions and police, magistrates, and judges are often better placed to achieve favourable results. Being confident in the courtroom is important because it helps individuals present their case effectively and make the sentence submission realistic.

National Media Turns to Michael for Trusted Legal Expertise

Michael is a trusted legal expert in the media and has become one of Australia's leading criminal defence lawyers. He has been the legal correspondent for Channel 7, where he speaks to thousands of audience on morning live shows for many years. Michael provides commentary on numerous broadcast programs, including Sunrise and Weekend Sunrise, A Current Affair, Today Tonight, The Morning Show, and All National News Channels.

Over the years, he spoke about the Sheldon Pearl Corby case, the Bali Nine, Arnold Schwarzenegger, the Mushroom murder case, and Alan Jones. He finds these cases interesting to research and then simplifies the legal process for the viewers of Australia.

Self-representation Success Programme

There are a lot of people who simply cannot afford lawyers, and legal aid is not always available. For people who are facing legal issues, they have the option to represent themselves instead of hiring lawyers. Michael has created the Confidence Australia Program to help people self-represent for minor police offences, minor traffic offences, diversion, and other things. He also offers payment plans for those who require legal assistance.

Michael believes that it is very important for people to have confidence and a roadmap for certain circumstances, especially when someone has no previous criminal record, and the matter is relatively straightforward, and they may choose to represent themselves in court instead of hiring a lawyer. He also suggests a program that helps people understand the process and preparation of self-representation.

Michael's Advice for People Facing First-Time Traffic Offences

Michael advises that people facing a traffic offence for the first time should act promptly. While legal issues can feel overwhelming and life is often busy, it is important not to delay addressing the legal matter. If the driving license and reputation may be at stake, a criminal conviction can have long-term effects. As soon as a person receives court documents, they should contact a lawyer for early legal guidance to reduce stress and secure a more favourable outcome.
