

ClearLane Provides COI Tracking and Carrier Insurance Monitoring for Freight Brokerages

Dedicated COI tracking monitors certificate expirations, auto liability and cargo coverage, and insurance status changes across the carrier network.

NEW YORK, NY, UNITED STATES, July 28, 2026 /EINPresswire.com/ -- ClearLane (getclearlane.com), a freight back-office operations provider, today announced dedicated certificate of insurance (COI) tracking and carrier insurance monitoring for freight brokerages and 3PLs. The service maintains current insurance documentation across the broker's entire carrier network, tracking expiration dates, coverage amounts, and policy changes.

ClearLane: COI Tracking and Carrier Insurance Monitoring

A COI is only accurate on the day it was issued. Policies get cancelled mid-term for non-payment. Coverage amounts change at renewal. Certificates expire while the carrier keeps hauling. When a broker dispatches a load to a carrier whose auto liability or cargo coverage has lapsed, the broker carries exposure it doesn't know it has. The gap usually surfaces only when a claim is filed.

Nobody notices an expired COI until there's a claim. Then it's the broker's problem. Continuous tracking is the only way to stay ahead of it.”

Alexander Kochas, Founder & Head of Operations, ClearLane

ClearLane's compliance team collects COIs at carrier onboarding, tracks expiration dates across the full network, requests updated certificates ahead of renewal, verifies auto liability and cargo coverage amounts against the broker's requirements, and flags carriers whose coverage has lapsed or fallen below threshold. The service operates as part of ClearLane's broader freight back-office services alongside FMCSA authority monitoring and safety rating tracking.

For a brokerage working with 200 or more active carriers, COI tracking alone is a continuous workload: certificates expire on a rolling basis throughout the year, carriers change insurers, and agents send updated documents that need to be verified and filed. Handled manually, the work gets deprioritized during busy weeks, which is exactly when loads are moving and exposure is highest. ClearLane's dedicated team keeps the tracking continuous regardless of load volume. For teams that keep verification in-house, ClearLane also offers a free carrier compliance tracking template.

The financial exposure from a single lapsed policy can dwarf years of COI tracking costs. A cargo claim on a $50,000 load where the carrier's coverage lapsed two weeks before the incident leaves the broker holding liability it assumed was covered. An auto liability gap on an accident claim can run into six or seven figures. These are not hypothetical scenarios — they are the reason FMCSA compliance and insurance verification exist as requirements in the first place. The difference between brokerages that catch lapses and those that don't is whether the tracking runs continuously or only at onboarding. ClearLane's compliance team runs it continuously.
