LAKEVILLE, MN, UNITED STATES, June

Minnesota's Best is decided entirely by public voting. Minnesotans cast more than 970,000 votes across more than 350 categories. Three winners are named in each category: Gold, Silver, and Bronze. For Minnesota Hospice, the Gold award reflects votes from across the state, in a contest open to every hospice provider serving Minnesota families.

"The Gold award in hospice care belongs to our entire care team," said Ken Haglind, Founding CEO of Minnesota Hospice. "It is earned one family at a time, and we are humbled to be voted the top hospice in Minnesota."

Minnesota Hospice is in its tenth year of caring for families across the Twin Cities southern metro. Earlier this month, Minnesota Hospice was also named a Star Tribune Top Workplace for the second consecutive year, ranking among the state's top ten small business employers in a separate program based on confidential employee feedback. Two recognitions in the same month, one from staff and one from people across the state, say the same thing about Minnesota Hospice: a team that feels called to serve, and families who feel the difference.

Hospice is an emotional category to win in public voting. Families experience hospice through their loved one's final days, often one of the most challenging times they have ever faced.

Earning Gold in this category recognizes the exceptional end-of-life care Minnesota Hospice provides.

Minnesota Hospice has also been named Best Hospice in the Sun Current Readers' Choice Awards for six consecutive years and is honored to add the statewide Minnesota's Best Gold to those recognitions.

"Ten years in, we are incredibly humbled and grateful to hear the families we serve say we are the best," Haglind said.
