Founded in California in 2009, Fabio Viviani Hospitality was born from a growing demand for more than just great food. As partners increasingly sought Fabio's expertise in concept development, branding, and operations, the company evolved into a full-scale hospitality platform that helps hotels, casinos, universities, healthcare campuses, and real estate developers create destination dining experiences that are both memorable for guests and financially successful for partners.

Today, FVH owns, operates, or partners in more than 50 restaurant concepts across more than 20 U.S. markets, serving millions of guests annually. Through strategic partnerships with leading hotels, resorts, casinos, universities, and lifestyle developments, the company has become one of the most prolific chef-driven hospitality groups in the country.

During the Inside Business Today interview, Viviani explains what makes FVH fundamentally different from traditional restaurant groups and celebrity chef brands. Rather than building a single chain of restaurants under one name, FVH acts as a hospitality development company, creating customized concepts tailored to each partner's unique audience, location, and business objectives.

A key focus of the segment is FVH's ability to combine culinary creativity with operational discipline. While many hospitality organizations excel at either food and beverage innovation or large-scale operations, FVH has built a reputation for successfully balancing both. The result is a portfolio of concepts that deliver exceptional guest experiences while maintaining strong financial performance and long-term sustainability.

The interview also highlights the company's nimble, collaborative approach to development. Unlike larger hospitality organizations burdened by bureaucracy, FVH is known for its ability to move quickly, adapt to partner needs, and execute efficiently without sacrificing quality. This flexibility has fueled the company's continued growth and expansion into new markets and partnership opportunities nationwide.

At the heart of every FVH concept is the influence of Fabio Viviani's Italian heritage and philosophy of hospitality. For Viviani, great hospitality is about more than food—it is about bringing people together, creating memorable experiences, and building spaces where guests feel welcomed, connected, and inspired to return.

"Fabio Viviani Hospitality represents the perfect blend of creativity and business excellence," said Bill and Giuliana Rancic. "Their ability to create unique hospitality experiences while delivering real value for partners is what sets them apart in an incredibly competitive industry."

"We're excited to feature Fabio Viviani Hospitality on Inside Business Today," said Gila Stern, Vice President of Production. "Fabio's entrepreneurial journey and the company's remarkable growth demonstrate how passion, authenticity, and operational excellence can come together to create lasting success."

The segment also highlights FVH's continued expansion, including new partnerships with hotels, lifestyle developments, institutional organizations, and corporate campuses. As the company grows, its mission remains unchanged: creating hospitality concepts that people love and businesses that thrive.
