organizations have set ambitious goals to increase the number of women in leadership positions. But which measures actually lead to sustainable change? What makes the search for female executives different in the context of Female Executive Search? Which approaches work in practice – and which do not?

These and other questions will be explored by female executive search partners Nina Bransch and Fiona Ruff in the next HUNTING/HER Headhunter Talk with EnBW Board Member Colette Rückert-Hennen. What specific initiatives has EnBW successfully implemented to promote women in leadership? What does it take to embed diversity and female leadership as a core business strategy rather than treating it as a stand-alone HR topic? How were leaders and the wider organization engaged throughout the process? Which challenges had to be overcome – and most importantly, what results and learnings emerged along the way?

The discussion will focus not on theory, but on real-world business experience – including measures that did not deliver the desired results. After all, some of the most valuable insights emerge when organizations have to adapt, learn, and try new approaches.

Join us for an open conversation about successful strategies, measurable progress, and honest lessons learned from a long-term transformation journey.

The talk is aimed at CEOs, senior executives, HR leaders, and anyone interested in increasing the representation of women in leadership positions and leveraging diversity as a driver of business success.
