

Bee Setups Client Reviews Highlight 90-Day Warranty and In-House Post-Setup Support

Recent client reviews point to the company's 90-day post-completion warranty and continued designer access as reasons owners describe the handoff as low stress.

They made hosting easier by taking care of everything. The space feels comfortable for guests and the design works really well.”

increasingly call out what happens after the furniture is in place, not only the setup itself. Bee Setups, a full-service short-term rental furnishing and design company serving property investors across the United States, backs each completed project with a 90-day post-completion warranty handled in-house, and several recent reviews describe that support as a reason the experience felt manageable. For property investors who live far from their rentals or manage more than one, that after-installation coverage often weighs as heavily in the decision as the look of the finished space. The company treats the warranty period and ongoing designer access as part of the turnkey promise rather than as add-ons.

Under the model, support does not end at installation. The same designer who planned a property remains the point of contact for future reorders, so an owner adding a second listing or refreshing a first one works with someone already familiar with the space. The 90-day warranty support, also managed by the in-house team, covers the window when a newly furnished property is first put into service and any early issues tend to surface. Bee Setups describes both elements as standard rather than premium tiers across the projects it takes on. Because the same in-house team that furnished a property also handles any warranty questions, owners are not handed to a separate vendor when something needs attention.

That sense of being looked after appears directly in the reviews. Brandon H., a host, described the overall experience in his account. “They made hosting easier by taking care of everything,” he wrote. “The space feels comfortable for guests and the design works really well.” The comment fits a broader pattern in Bee Setups client reviews, where owners credit the company with removing the coordination burden that typically follows a furnishing project. Reviewers frequently frame that continuity as the difference between a one-time delivery and an ongoing working relationship. For first-time hosts in particular, that ongoing access can matter as much as the furniture itself when a property is new to the market.

For Bee Setups, the post-setup window is where a furnishing partner either holds up or does not. "A finished room is the start of the relationship, not the end of it, and the warranty and designer continuity are how that is put into practice," a member of the Bee Setups client success team said.
