

Out-of-State Investors Leave Bee Setups Customer Reviews Describing Fully Remote Furnishing

Owners who live in one state and invest in another describe a furnishing process managed through photos, updates, and proactive decisions while they stayed home

MIAMI, FL, UNITED STATES, August 6, 2026 /EINPresswire.com/ -- A recurring segment in Bee Setups customer reviews comes from investors who never set foot on the job site: owners who live in one state, buy a short-term rental in another, and hand the entire furnishing project to a remote team. Bee Setups, a full-service short-term rental furnishing and design company serving property investors across the United States, runs design, procurement, delivery, and installation as a turnkey engagement, which makes a fully remote setup possible for owners who cannot be on site.

I needed a team I could trust to handle the setup remotely. They kept me looped in through photos and emails. The finished space looked better than I expected.”

Damaris, an out-of-state owner

Remote owners tend to weigh communication as heavily as design. Bee Setups provides room-by-room renderings and a line-by-line purchasing list an owner can approve from anywhere, then keeps the client updated with photos and status notes as items are ordered, delivered, and installed. For an out-of-state investor, that visibility replaces the trips, rental cars, and on-site coordination a do-it-yourself setup would otherwise require, and it lets the owner approve choices without traveling to the property.

Damaris, an out-of-state owner, described managing a project from across the country. “I live in Michigan, and the property is in Arizona, so I needed a team I could trust to handle the setup remotely,” she wrote. “They kept me looped in through photos and emails and were proactive about small decisions. The finished space looked better than I expected, and guests comment on how cozy and well-appointed the place is.” Her account reflects why remote owners appear so often in the company customer reviews, where trust and visibility matter as much as taste.

Remote projects also shift how trust is built, since an owner who cannot inspect the work in person relies on documentation instead. Bee Setups leans on renderings, the editable purchasing list, and regular photo updates to stand in for a site visit, letting an owner confirm choices and track progress from another state. Reviewers in this segment frequently mention that the updates arrived without having to be chased, which is what made a hands-off arrangement feel safe rather than risky. The company frames that visibility as a requirement of remote work, not a courtesy. For out-of-state investors deciding whether to buy in an unfamiliar market, knowing the furnishing can be handled and documented from afar is often what makes the purchase feasible at all.

Bee Setups treats the remote workflow as standard rather than a special case. "Distance should not change the result, so the process is built to keep an absent owner informed at every step," a member of the Bee Setups client success team said. That structure leaves the final decisions with the owner while the team handles the work on the ground. The company collects remote-owner accounts among the testimonials on its reviews page at beesetups.com/reviews and shows finished projects on its showcase at instagram.com/beesetups.
