Recent client reviews recount furnishing projects completed in a matter of weeks, with the company managing delivery and installation end to end.

Our four-bedroom house was finished in about three to four weeks, the three-bedroom in three weeks, and the five-bedroom in six weeks.”

Nancy R., repeat client who furnished three rentals

turn on a single question for an investor waiting to open a rental: how long until the rooms are full and the listing is ready. Bee Setups, a full-service short-term rental furnishing and design company serving property investors across the United States, runs delivery and installation as part of a turnkey engagement, and several recent client reviews describe projects moving from empty rooms to a furnished, listing-ready space in a matter of weeks.

The delivery stage is where a turnkey model is tested. After designs are approved and the purchasing list is finalized, Bee Setups coordinates sourcing, shipping, receiving, and professional installation so the owner does not assemble furniture, schedule deliveries, or manage a crew. The company describes timelines as estimates that vary with property size, market, and product availability, while reviewers tend to recall the elapsed time as shorter than a comparable do-it-yourself effort would have taken.

A repeat client who furnished three rentals recalled the pace across projects of different sizes. “Our four-bedroom house was finished in about three to four weeks, the three-bedroom in three weeks, and the five-bedroom in six weeks,” the review said. The specifics illustrate a point that recurs in the company client reviews: larger homes take longer, but the turnkey handling keeps the owner out of the logistics regardless of the project's size. Reviewers tend to describe the schedule as predictable once a design is approved.

The delivery stage is also where the no-assembly model is most visible to an owner. Because Bee Setups receives, places, and installs the furnishings, the client never opens a box, builds a piece, or schedules a delivery window, which removes the part of a do-it-yourself setup that tends to stall. Reviewers describe arriving at a finished space rather than a pile of cartons, with rooms staged and ready for listing photos. The company frames the timeline as an estimate that depends on product availability and property size, and it keeps the owner updated as items move from order to install. For an investor watching a mortgage clock on an empty property, the difference between weeks and months of setup is the part of the delivery story the reviews emphasize most.

Bee Setups frames delivery speed as a function of preparation rather than rushing. "Most of the timeline is decided before a single item ships, in the design and the purchasing list, so a clean plan tends to produce a fast install," a Bee Setups spokesperson said. The company keeps additional delivery-focused accounts on its reviews page at beesetups.com/reviews and shows finished installations on its showcase at instagram.com/beesetups.
