Meet Terry Inglese:

Terry Inglese (PhD and MBA) works at the School of Business of a University of Applied Sciences and Arts in Switzerland, where she serves as a lecturer in Business Communication, Academic Writing, Storytelling in Data Visualization, and Critical Thinking. Her research focuses on the psychology of learning, instructional design, didactics with new technologies, and, more recently, on Artificial Intelligence Literacy.

Before entering academia, Terry spent nearly a decade between one of the three Swiss Public Television stations and a regional TV station in Switzerland, where she designed cultural TV programs, produced documentaries, directed her own documentary, and coordinated workflows among journalists and technical teams. During this time, she also developed and tested an educational model using TV multimedia archives - work that later evolved into her PhD research in multimedia learning in higher education. Following her doctoral studies, Terry served for about 5 years as a postdoctoral researcher and lecturer at the University of California, Santa Barbara (UCSB), where she continued experimenting and exploring innovative approaches to learning with multimedia and multimodality.

In her free time, she enjoys sharing her passion for teaching Italian language and culture.
