Created for international travelers, families, students, and history enthusiasts, Res Militares allows guests to explore the Roman army beyond traditional museum displays. Through reconstructed equipment, educational storytelling, and an engaging visitor experience, the attraction helps bring ancient military life closer to modern audiences.

Discovering the Life of a Roman Legionary in Rome

Rome is known worldwide for the Colosseum, the Roman Forum, Trajan's Column, and its extraordinary archaeological heritage. These monuments reveal the grandeur of imperial power, but the story of Rome was also built by the legionaries who marched, trained, fought, built roads, defended borders, and carried Roman authority across the ancient world.

Understanding the life of a roman legionary means discovering the daily discipline behind Rome's military success. A Roman soldier was not only a warrior, but also a trained professional within a highly organized system. His routine included weapon practice, formation drills, long marches, camp construction, equipment maintenance, and service under strict military command.

At Res Militares, visitors can explore this world through a focused experience dedicated to Roman weapons, armor, shields, helmets, military symbols, and battlefield organization. The result is a clear and accessible introduction to the Roman army and to the role legionaries played in the expansion and identity of ancient Rome.

“The Roman legionary was more than a soldier,” says Res Militares. “He was a symbol of discipline, endurance, and Roman power. Our goal is to help visitors understand this world through an experience that is both educational and immersive.”
