Paul Ferrara, President and CEO, PatchMaster

Ruvin brings a unique and highly disciplined background to his new role, having previously worked as a field service engineer in the science and biotechnology industries. His experience in laboratory and cleanroom environments, where even the smallest imperfection can carry significant consequences, has instilled a strong attention to detail and a commitment to maintaining exceptionally clean and precise workspaces.

"In my previous work, even a speck of dust could cost a company a significant amount of money," said Ruvin. "That level of precision and care translates directly into how I approach every job. I take pride in delivering repairs that blend seamlessly with the existing wall or ceiling, leaving customers confident the job was done right."

Ruvin explored a range of business ownership opportunities before selecting PatchMaster, ultimately drawn to its straightforward, home-based, and scalable model. With additional support from a family background that includes extensive experience in construction, remodeling, and franchise ownership, he is well-positioned to build and grow the business in the Providence market.

Homeowners commonly contact PatchMaster after plumbing repairs, electrical work, HVAC installations, water leaks, home renovations, moving furniture, and everyday wear and tear have damaged walls or ceilings.
