Key Market Drivers:-

Several factors are accelerating the growth of the global textile fabrics market, including:

- Rapid expansion of the fashion and apparel industry.
- Rising investments in textile manufacturing and infrastructure.
- Growing demand from the oil and gas sector.

- Technological advancements in chemical processing and fabric production.

However, fluctuations in raw material prices continue to pose a challenge to market growth. On the positive side, increasing participation in professional sports and the growing consumer preference for activewear and performance apparel are expected to create lucrative opportunities for industry players throughout the forecast period.

Polyester Continues to Lead the Market:

By fabric type, the polyester segment accounted for the largest market share in 2021, contributing to more than half of the global market revenue. The segment is also expected to register the fastest CAGR of 6.9% through 2031.

Its widespread adoption is attributed to several advantages, including:

- High durability
- Superior strength
- Excellent finish
- Cost-effectiveness
- Versatility across multiple applications

The report also provides detailed insights into cotton, polyamide, and other fabric categories.
