

Stallion Infrastructure Services Sells SIMETRY to Wireless Logic

Transaction advances SIMETRY's next phase of growth while reinforcing Stallion's strategic focus on technology-enabled infrastructure solutions

HOUSTON, TX, UNITED STATES, July 9, 2026 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Stallion Infrastructure Services ("Stallion"), a leading provider of technology-enabled infrastructure solutions across a diverse range of end markets and Littlejohn & Co., LLC and Spectrum Group Management portfolio company, today announced the completion of the sale of SIMETRY, its managed Internet of Things (IoT) connectivity business, to Wireless Logic, a global leader in IoT connectivity and device management.

Founded in 2020 as a division of Stallion, SIMETRY has grown into a trusted provider of managed IoT connectivity and infrastructure solutions. The business delivers customized cellular connectivity, unified SIM and device management across multiple carriers, secure global network access, IoT hardware, provisioning services, and 24/7 U.S.-based technical support. Today, SIMETRY supports organizations across a diverse range of industries that depend on secure, reliable, and scalable connectivity for mission-critical operations.

Under Stallion's ownership, SIMETRY established a strong reputation for delivering tailored connectivity solutions backed by deep technical expertise and responsive customer support. Its ability to simplify complex IoT deployments while helping customers securely connect, monitor, and manage devices at scale positioned the business for continued growth and made it a natural strategic fit for Wireless Logic.

Strategic Rationale

The transaction marks an important milestone for both organizations.

- For Stallion, it enables the company to continue its strategic focus on its tech-enabled site services and infrastructure solutions portfolio, including its rapidly growing Security & Surveillance division which provides mobile surveillance trailers and units, AI-enhanced monitoring, U.S.-based security operating center, and perimeter security. The transaction also demonstrates Stallion's ability to identify emerging technology opportunities, build differentiated businesses, and create long-term value through strategic investment and disciplined execution.

· For Wireless Logic, which manages more than 20 million connected devices across 165 countries through relationships with more than 50 mobile network operators worldwide, the acquisition expands its North American footprint and further strengthens its global IoT connectivity platform. By combining SIMETRY's customer relationships, operational expertise, and managed service capabilities with Wireless Logic's global connectivity platform and international carrier ecosystem, the combined organization is well positioned to deliver expanded connectivity solutions and enhanced support for customers operating across North America and around the world.

Darron Anderson, Chief Executive Officer, Stallion Infrastructure Services, "Since founding SIMETRY in 2020, we have watched this team build something truly special, a managed IoT connectivity platform that earned the trust of customers both in demanding operating environments and critical connectivity functions across the globe. As Stallion deepens its focus on our tech-enabled site services and infrastructure solutions, finding the right long-term home for SIMETRY was a strategic priority. Wireless Logic's global scale, deep carrier relationships, and commitment to the IoT connectivity space make them the right long-term partner for SIMETRY confident in what comes next."

Anderson added, "As Stallion continues to evolve, we remain focused on delivering innovative infrastructure solutions that help customers operate more safely, efficiently, and productively across construction, energy, industrial, government, and commercial markets."

Houlihan Lokey served as lead financial advisor to Stallion on the transaction.
