A new children's picture book is making waves by turning ocean science into an empowering adventure for young readers. Ocean Superheroes by Gabrielle Raymond McGee (Tiny Torch Books/June 23, 2026), is a vibrant, educational story that invites children to discover the surprising ways marine animals help protect the planet—guided by renowned oceanographer Dr. Sylvia Earle.

Ocean Superheroes stands out by introducing young readers to real marine “heroes”—from plankton to whales—and the vital roles they play in sustaining ocean health, while seamlessly weaving STEM concepts into an engaging, easy-to-understand story.

The story revolves around a curious classroom that embarks on an unforgettable journey into the depths of the ocean with Dr. Earle, a real-life guide, uncovering the rich biodiversity that keeps Earth healthy.

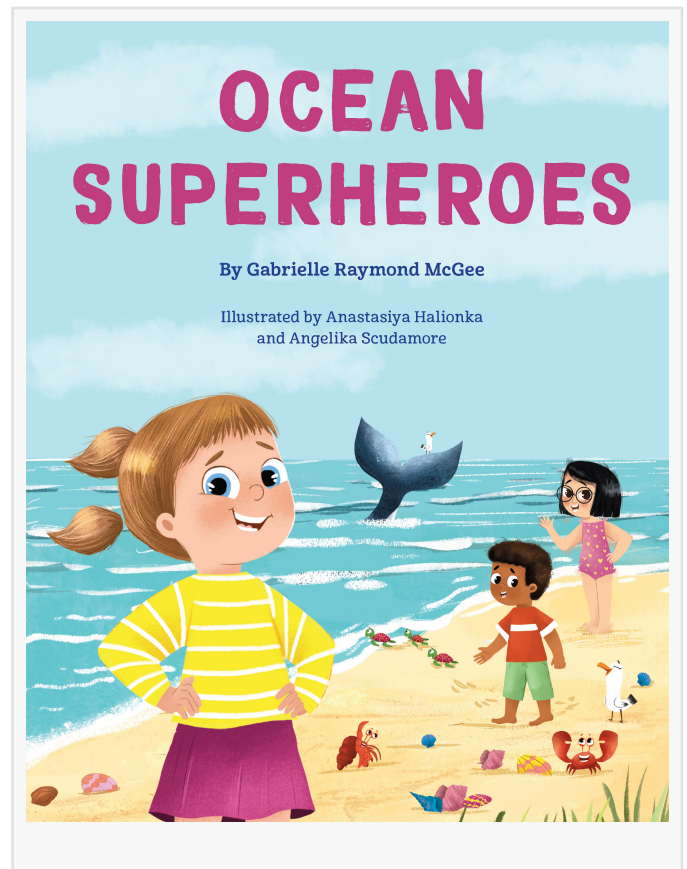

Along the way, one curious student discovers that the ocean is filled with “superheroes” and is inspired to become a “Wavemaker”—joining a real-world movement founded by the author. She rallies her friends to form a Wavemaker team, taking action in their community by cleaning local beaches and helping protect ocean life, showing young readers how small efforts can create meaningful change.

“The ocean’s embrace knows no bounds, and neither should children’s dreams,” says Gabrielle, who is also the founder of FutureWavesHQ.org. “Every child, every parent, every caregiver, and every teacher has a place by the shore, a voice that matters, and the power to create change. This is why I wrote this book.”

Ocean Superheroes empowers readers with simple, actionable ways to protect oceans and marine life, and includes a glossary and additional resources for parents, educators, and curious learners who want to dive deeper.

At a time when environmental awareness is more important than ever, Ocean Superheroes offers a hopeful, engaging entry point for children to learn about conservation and become stewards of the planet. Perfect for classrooms, libraries, and families, the book delivers a powerful message: everyone, no matter their age, can help protect our ocean and our planet.
