

Jennifer Farrell's Groundbreaking Showhome 'Interconnected Changeable Environments' Hits Mid-Year Reveal

Interconnected Changeable Environments Explores the Future of Residential Living through Newly Revealed Spaces Redefining the Adaptable Home of the Future.

LOS ANGELES, CA, UNITED STATES, July 17, 2026 /EINPresswire.com/ -- As style icon and tastemaker, Jennifer Farrell is a familiar face to a global audience of design fans and industry professionals alike, who have followed her designs and tv shows for over two decades. Revealing a mid-year milestone for her Destination Design Showhome Experience: Interconnected Changeable Environments, acclaimed Designer & TV Host Jennifer Farrell is sharing with a global audience how the exquisite designs of her showhome project have come to life.

Jennifer Farrell's groundbreaking showhome experience continues to explore how architecture, materials, lighting, furnishings, and wellness shape the future of residential living.

"Interconnected Changeable Environments is a global design journey and experience that I'm incredibly proud of, and I can't wait to share the final reveal with the world." Jennifer commented, "This showhome project will redefine the adaptable home of the future, through an immersive virtual experience leading up to the grand opening in Southwest France - and I could not be more excited."

Jennifer's preceding groundbreaking showhome Calibu Vineyard, a 7,300 sq-ft, 19 room estate nested on a private vineyard in the Malibu hills, has been lauded as a game-changing tour-de-force, revolutionizing the concept of experiential marketing and integrated Brand Partnerships. Through the combination of the overwhelming critical praise and success of Calibu Vineyard, Jennifer paved the way for the next evolution of the Design Showhome Experience: Interconnected Changeable Environments. Jennifer's remarkable design vision of the home of tomorrow and her high-concept multi-media venture creates a marriage of high-end design and an ancient-meets-modern aesthetic — blending three historic stone structures into one modern, changeable compound that adapts over time for living well through all stages of life — with self-sustaining adaptable spaces that evolve through time to become a forever home.

“Part of the story I want to tell with my Design Showhome Experience: Interconnected Changeable Environments is how the global culture of design is also personal and connected. Bringing the heritage of this ancient property in the South of France into the future with adaptable, changing environments, and the finest of luxury design as the great connector in that global experience – that’s what I.C.E House is about, and what makes our breathtaking location the perfect place to tell that story,” Jennifer shared.

Jennifer Farrell’s choice for this showhome project chose the historic Bordeaux estate with a multi-structure space for Interconnected Changeable Environments, because it embodied the very philosophy at the heart of the project: honoring the past while designing for the future. With centuries-old stone farmhouses, a historic windmill, and vineyards stretching beyond the property, the setting offered a rare opportunity to explore how timeless architecture can evolve to support modern living.

“As the vision for Interconnected Changeable Environments came to life, I wanted to create a sustainable, adaptable, changeable, multi-structure space that would evolve over time so that you never had to change your home; your home would instead change with you. I came to envision the spaces as more than interconnected but also changeable, so they could disconnect and reconnect as needed. They would be separate environments that could come together in different configurations and for different phases of life,” Jennifer said.

Throughout the project, Jennifer Farrell has collaborated with an extraordinary roster of luxury design partners including Global Views, Ferguson Home, Emser Tile, Cosentino, Kalco Lighting, Grohe, Duravit, Signature Hardware, Corston, StyleRow, Litokol, The Tile Doctor and La Cornue, demonstrating how thoughtful collaboration can elevate every aspect of the modern home.
