Looking ahead, the market is expected to continue this upward trend, reaching $72.16 billion by 2030, with a slightly higher CAGR of 6.8%. The forecast period's growth will be driven by substantial investments in next-generation defense technologies and the wider adoption of smart, precision-guided ammunition systems. Autonomous and networked combat platforms are also expanding, alongside a growing emphasis on bolstering domestic defense manufacturing capabilities. Furthermore, there is an increasing procurement of advanced weaponry tailored for asymmetric warfare. Major trends anticipated to influence the market include the modernization of infantry weapons and ammunition platforms, demand for lightweight yet durable combat arms, the rise of modular weapon configurations for tactical versatility, and ongoing development of precision-guided ammunition. Enhanced focus on operational readiness and strategic stockpiling will also support market expansion.

Understanding Arms and Ammunition as Key Defense Components
Arms and ammunition encompass the weapons and the corresponding materials necessary for military, defense, and security functions. Arms refer to weapons created for combat, protection, or tactical scenarios, while ammunition includes the cartridges, bullets, shells, missiles, and other components that enable these weapons to function effectively. Together, they form the critical system of weaponry and supplies needed to ensure operational effectiveness and military preparedness.

Geopolitical Tensions as a Major Growth Catalyst in the Arms and Ammunition Market
Rising geopolitical tensions are one of the foremost factors propelling market growth. These tensions represent strained or conflict-prone relationships between different nations or regions, often triggered by political, strategic, military, or economic disagreements. With the increase in cross-border security threats and regional military conflicts, many governments are prioritizing the strengthening of their defense capabilities and military readiness. This has led to expanded investments in advanced security technologies and weapon systems. Arms and ammunition play a vital role in this context, enhancing defense strength and facilitating preparedness in the face of ongoing regional conflicts and security challenges.

For instance, in July 2024, The Armed Conflict Location & Event Data Project (ACLED) — a US-based nonprofit organization — reported more than 165,273 instances of political violence worldwide, marking a 15% rise compared to the previous year from July 2023 to June 2024. This significant increase in conflict events underscores the persistent geopolitical friction fueling demand in the arms and ammunition market.
